Monmouth Hosts Employers at Annual Career Fair

The University hosted nearly 400 students and more than 100 employers at the annual Fall Career Day on Oct. 31 from 12:30 p.m. to 4 p.m. on the second floor of the OceanFirst Bank Center.

Open to all Monmouth students and alumni, the event was held to provide insight into potential career opportunities. According to William Hill, Assistant Dean of Career Services, government, business, non-profits, small, regional, and national employers were present at the fair. Employers from organizations such as Hackensack Meridian Health, the United States Secret Service, and the New Jersey State Police were present.

“These job fair style events provide an excellent opportunity for employers and potential employees to connect,” said Jeffrey Mass, Assistant Director of Career Services. “Career Days typically attract hundreds of Monmouth students and alumni, as well as dozens of business, government, and non-profit employers. A career fair is a great chance to meet potential employers and to acquire more about career related options in your field of study,” he continued.

Mass confirmed that along with the 109 employers present at the event, 26 of the employers were present at Monmouth for the first time. “Career Day provides Monmouth University students and graduates the opportunity to obtain that much needed face time with recruiters to network,” Mass added.

Students had the chance to network and meet with prospective employers at the annual Fall Career Day.

University Reacts to Pittsburgh Shootings at Chabad Club Event

NATALIE OSTERMANN

Nearly 400 students and faculty participated in an event hosted by the Chabad club called #PittsburghStrong in front of the Rebecca Stafford Student Center on Oct. 30.

This event was held in light of the shooting on Sat. Oct. 27, the holy day of sabbath in the Jewish religion, which claimed the lives of 11 people according to CNN.

The #PittsburghStrong campaign garnered the attention of members of the Monmouth community stopped by their tables in the Student Center to partake on various activities to show their support to the victims of the shooting and stand up to hate. While at the tables, supporters were given the opportunity to write letters to the Pittsburgh victims and pledge good deeds, or Mitzvahs, in support of the victims and pledge opportunities to write letters to the Pittsburgh community.

While at the tables, Hans, a senior social work student and president of Chabad, “That is where the board on good deeds came into play.”

Good deeds were written on bright post-it notes and placed on a giant poster board. University President Grey Dimenna, Esq., did the honors and placed the first good deed on the Mitzvah poster and by the end of the day, the board was overflowing. Greenberg further explained, “This affects me on a personal level,” said Rabbis Greenberg, an adjunct professor of religious studies and advisor for Chabad.

Rather than be a solemn event, Chabad strived and succeeded at celebrating the lives of those lost and promoting the potential for good in the world. “The Jewish people are all one family and 11 people from my family were murdered for being Jewish.” Greenberg explained that, the shooting itself was a personal attack because of his status as a leader in the Jewish community, as well as how he has friends in the Pittsburgh community from his time teaching in Squirrel Hill, the neighborhood where the shooting took place.

“Our message is when there is darkness, add some light, do an act of kindness, do a good deed,” Greenberg explained. “Make this world a better place.”

Chabad’s stand against this act of terror began Monday morning, a day before #PittsburghStrong took place. Greenberg and the executive board for Chabad knew that they had to act fast if they wanted to do something to remember the lives of those lost in the shooting and to stand in solidarity against hate.

CAREER (cont. from pg. 1) and set themselves apart from the rest of the pack,” he said, emphasizing how unique the venue was. “Months of planning go into the coordination of Career Day,” said Hill. “We start planning at the end of the summer and although some work is done on the phone, we send several hundred emails concerning invitations, confirmations, logistics, and more. Plans must be put in place for parking, food, table set-up, room reservations, staffing, transportation to and from the venue, campus banners and signs, etc.” he continued. Hill also noted that hundreds of emails are sent to students advertising the event. Career Services also designed a career fair packet for students and alumni and offered a survey to the students in order to gain valuable feedback.

“Hi’s a good idea to go to the career fair because you can learn more about potential jobs and internships in your area,” commented one student. “I’m really impressed by the career fair overall,” said senior business administration student, Dana Pizzuti. “It’s an incredible opportunity to have so many well-known and established employers on campus all at once,” Pizzuti further elaborated. Samantha Smith, a senior psychology student, spoke candidly on the benefits of attending the fair. “The career fair was a very important experience,” explained Smith. “Getting a feel for different companies, practicing talking to future employers and networking are all benefits.”

Smith attended the career last spring for her industrial/organizational psychology class and is grateful for the fair for opening the door to new career options. “Through the Career fair I have broadened my contacts and opened my eyes to new possible career paths,” noted Smith Pizzuti was most excited by the company HMP Global because “project management and event coordination is what I’m looking to do professionally upon graduation in May.” She continued, “I was impressed by the table and recruiter willingness to help me understand what exactly their company does and more specifically what role I would play if granted a job offer.”

Overall, this was a very successful career day both in terms of employer attendance and student turnout, said Mass. “I was extremely impressed by the career fair overall,” said senior psychology student, Smith.

Monmouth Debate Team Wins Awards

NICHOLAS COSCARELLI CO-SENIOR POLITICAL EDITOR

The University’s Debate Team received two awards at the West Point Military Academy Tournament this weekend, over the weekend of Friday, Oct. 26 – Sunday, Oct. 28.

Nine teams comprised of 18 debaters compete in several divisions of the tournament. The team of Julia Bialy, a junior political science student; the team of Matt Gruhler, a junior political science student; and JP Suttle, a junior political science student, received awards for making it into the playoff rounds for making it into the playoff rounds for their first real experience at a tournament at West Point, where the team took home First Use” nuclear policy, which is a U.S. pledge to only use nuclear weapons in retaliatory fashion.

Suttle explained that this tournament was the first debate that he and Gruhler competed. “Going in to it we both did not know what to expect. Once we were in round everything started to click,” he explained. “Overall the West Point debate tournament was a great experience. He continued, “Matt and I were able to communicate reasonably well and both of us felt comfortable working together which definitely played a huge part in making it to the playoff rounds. Making it to the break rounds during my first debate tournament was an amazing feeling, however majority of our success came from the excellent coaching of Dr. Patten and all the team captains.

Gruhler explained that he and Suttle spent about 16 hours scrimmaging in preparation for their first real experience at a debate tournament. He said, “Yet going into our first round I was terribly nervous regardless of the hours spent practicing and scrimmaging.”

He noted that debate is, “a unique and fun experience that is unexplainable and must be experienced to truly understand how it motivates you fully academically and connects you with so many different various and diverse Monmouth students that you normally wouldn’t have known.”

Doe explained that and Bialy’s most important strategy was to communicating to the best, even when a round feels hopeless. “Yelling about how it is better to die a free thinker than live another day as a subject is kind of insane, but that’s just what you have to do sometimes. The highlight of my weekend was arguing that extinction from nuclear war is impossible because aliens will intervene to stop it and winning that argument,” she said.

Each member agreed that Patten was extremely helpful, and took each day as time to help the team to prepare. “His dedication is second to none and we are extremely lucky to have him as a coach,” Suttle said.

Gruhler agreed and said that debate is a program that demands a great deal of academic potential while being a caring professor that wants to see his debaters and students succeed, regardless if he has to stay on campus until 8 pm each night,” he said. “Debate has been one of the best experiences in my life because it has given me unique experiences to truly understand how it motivates you fully academically and connects you with so many different various and diverse Monmouth students that you normally wouldn’t have known.”

The team will compete at New York University this upcoming weekend, Friday, Nov. 9 – Sunday, Nov. 11.

award for one of the best delegates in the contest and will be forever grateful for the experiences that abroad,” she said.

Pope explained that this competition was only the second time participating in the University’s Model UN team. He represented the nation of Algeria in the Organization of Islamic Cooperation (OIC). “I began my preparation by doing research on Algeria’s stance on the two [debate] topics: how the Islamic world should respond to LGBT individuals and how the Islamic world should respond to terrorism. ‘It doesn’t matter if you’re from Long Branch or Pittsburgh, members of the Jewish faith were tragically killed,’ noted Nagy. ‘I’m sure that for students it’s very upsetting and unnerving and I wanted to make sure that they’re ok.’”

During this phone call, Greenberg expressed the club’s interest in holding an event to remember the lives lost in the Pittsburgh as soon as possible, and Nagy supported Chabad’s idea for the #PittsburghStrong campaign.

According to an article published by The New York Times on Oct. 27, the gunman took the lives of 11 congregants and wounded four police officers. According to the article, the gunman said the shooting was “among the deadliest against the Jewish community in the United States.”

Nagy weighed in on the impact the attack had on students, “I’m sure that for students it’s very upsetting and unnerving and I wanted to make sure that they’re ok.”

According to the article published by The New York Times, the shooting happened by rabbis. There are over 200 Jewish organizations governed by rabbis. There are over 200 chapters of Chabad at universities in the United States. Chabad has been active on many campuses and extended an invitation to the entire community. Chabad also plans on donating their religion and every day to the entire community. Members of Chabad will continue to spread the knowledge of Chabad, please contact Brielle Saunderson, a sophomore nursing student and vice president of Chabad, voice her concerns over the hate being behind the Pittsburgh shooting.

“Chabad is heartbreakingly sure that antisemitism is still so prevalent in today’s society, and that this hatred is so fierce that our lives could be stolen from us,” commented Saunderson.

Members of Chabad channeled their frustration surrounding the attacks towards actions to combat hate and promote tolerance. “We need to act and speak up toward hate speech. Today more than ever, we need to confront hate with love and unity,” stressed Davis.

“Chabad planned a follow up event for the #PittsburghStrong campaign on Nov. 2 during their weekly sabbath dinner to honor the victims of the Pittsburgh synagogue shooting. The service was held at Chabad of the shore and extended an invitation to the entire community. Chabad Club Hosts #PittsburghStrong Event

Why We Picked Monmouth

Choosing where you want to attend college can be an overwhelming yet exciting decision to make. It is an aspect of life that can determine the next few years in terms of friends, career, and opportunity. At The Outlook, our editors had varying opinions on what made them choose to attend Monmouth.

When talking to current editors, the college selection process takes into account a multitude of factors, one particularly being the proximity to one’s home. One editor stated, “After starting off at a community college, I decided to transfer to a school that was still close to home, so Monmouth was a good fit.”

Affordability is another crucial aspect that many editors took into consideration. Due to the financial burden and commitment of certain institutions, many editors pursued an associate degree at a local community college and then came to Monmouth to complete the remaining two years.

One editor said, “Tuition costs are a tough subject.” Luckily some of our editors are fortunate enough to get scholarships which allow them to continue here. The editor added, “Monmouth has given me an affordable education through academic scholarships.”

One editor said that although they were between Monmouth and another institution, he/she ultimately decided to come to Monmouth as a commuter student. The editor stated, “Commuting allows me to work at a place I’ve worked at for some time.”

The distance to the beach also influenced editors’ decisions. One editor said that he/she is happy with the choice of attending this school. One editor said, “If I have a break between classes, I like to go to the beach by Pier Village. Sometimes I do homework and other times I’ll just sit there and listen to music.”

In addition to that, a different editor said that although Monmouth is expensive, he/she believes that the opportunities that Monmouth has given them have made their experience worthwhile. “With the experiences I’ve had both inside and outside of the classroom, it is worth every single penny,” the editor said. “I will be a very proud alumni after I move on.”

Everybody is different and he/she all hold a variety of experiences. One editor believes that if he/she had to pick a school all over again, he/she would pick Monmouth without a question. “[Monmouth] has afforded me a lot of great opportunities that will be a part of my life forever,” the editor said.

When thinking about Monmouth, it is important to focus on the good qualities that it carries and the experiences that the students cherish. Many editors agreed that the size of the school allows them to enjoy their educational experience. One editor said that the “best quality Monmouth has is its size.” He/she continued in saying, “I much prefer small classrooms for better learning.”

Many students could agree that the small class sizes allow better relationships with professors. Another editor agreed in saying, “Class size is hands down the best because it makes individual attention and relationships possible.” He/she continued with saying that the size of the school allows them to get to different parts of campus in a quick manner.

One editor also said, “The opportunities Monmouth has given academically have really made a difference.” He/she further continued in saying that a lot of guidance that helps my passion in various ways.

The editor continued in saying that he/she appreciate the good rapport with the professors.

When considering which college you want to attend, it is also important to look at what you want to be involved in. Here at Monmouth, there are a variety of extracurriculars provided by the University that our staff is involved in.

One editor said that their job of being a Resident Assistant (RA) has allowed them to get to know Monmouth students on a level. “I get to interact with a ton of people,” the editor said. “They’ve helped bring out the best in me.”

In order to decide where you want to spend your time, you need to look at a variety of features and characteristics. The diverse views that come from The Outlook staff are ones that all highlight our unique yet fruitful experiences at Monmouth. If you are reading this, then hopefully your decision to be here at Monmouth is one that you are happy about.

If you like going to the dentist, please just know I’m judging you. Why? To be honest, it’s a necessity (especially after the candy consumption from the holidays), but that doesn’t mean I want to go. To be honest, I’d rather go through a hair dryer five times over before going to the dentist. What happened? I have my reasons.

I think the level of hatred people have for the dentist is based off of the amount of work you’ve had to get done on your face. Whether it’s normal cleanings, got handed a new toothbrush and sent on your way, or fillings, your dentist is the slap on the wrist you get for not flossing well enough. Oh how I wish it was just that easy.

I was born with an unfortunate set of teeth as well as an overactive mouth. One of the first things that I found out I still had two baby teeth. Yes, you read that right! I still have two baby teeth. Which is why you will see said teeth in the picture. I told my dentist that I did not want to be caught. At the end of my cleaning with no appointment! I was always fascinated by the plaque off of my lower teeth. It may be weird, but I love the sun peeking through my eyes.

Top New Jersey Lawmakers Delay Vote to Legalize Marijuana in the State

ALBERT SHALOM
STAFF WRITER

State Senator President Stephen Sweeney (D-Gloucester) and state Assembly Speaker Craig Coughlin (D-Middlesex), scrapped a plan to vote on a bill to legalize recreational marijuan in New Jersey, on Oct. 29.

The two top lawmakers in the New Jersey legislature said that the reason for the delay is because they remain at odds with Governor Phil Murphey over what the law should say.

Sweeney and Coughlin also stressed that “very few” points of the legislation are left to work out with the Murphy administration, and remain optimistic that the Senate could reach an agreement and vote to pass the bill before the end of the year.

There has been push for the legalization of marijuana in New Jersey. Murphy made the issue of legalizing recreational marijuana a central part of his platform during his 2017 campaign and running for Governor in 2017.

One of his main reasons is to help the state’s recidivism rates and to help eradicate the black market for weed within the state. A Rutgers-Eagleton poll released on Oct. 3 shows that not only New Jerseyans but those outside the state want legal marijuana, they also believe that low-level marijuana convictions should be cleared and that legalization would be good for the economy.

As marijuana legalization approaches reality in the state, New Jerseyans are fully on board, said Ashley Konig, Director of the Eagleton Center for Public Interest Polling at Rutgers.

“Support has built up slowly over the years, with this being the first time a majority has ever sided with legalization,” she said.

The University’s Polling Institute from earlier this year also found similar results, showing that 60 percent of New Jersey residents support legalization.

Kenneth Mitchell, Ph.D., Chair of the Department of Political Science and Sociology, and associate professor of political science, also explained that making marijuana legal for recreational use within the state could help the state save money and reduce the number of crimes involving marijuana.

For instance, taxes would no longer be going to prisons, and police officers would no longer be spending as much time and effort to catch people in non-violent acts involving the potentially legal drug.

According to the Cook Partisan Voting Index (PVI), the district has a score of R+3, meaning it tends to vote Republican. Sherrill won the election with more than 55 percent of the vote in the race. Trump won the state with a large margin, and the University’s most recent poll, only 45 percent of NJ-11 voters approved of his performance in office.

“Even though Republicans have the edge in party affiliation, many are not happy with the president or key GOP initiatives such as the tax reform plan, Murray said. The poll revealed that the tax reform plan passed in December is particularly unpopular in the district.

Despite its largely wealthier demographics, the county tends to lean towards the Republican Party. In the state, 53 percent of New Jersey voters in NJ-11 favored Trump, 44 percent supported Clinton.

There are also many Republicans who are against the idea of legalizing marijuana. "Even though there’s a bill to legalize marijuana throughout the state. Votes are scheduled before 2019.

Your Journal, Your Friend

CHLOE BARONE
CONTRIBUTING WRITER

The word “journal” is often accompanied by the stereotype of writing proclamations of love that your middle school crush may typically never see. At times, writing in a diary is made fun of because but it is the perfect way to express feelings that you don’t want to run share with friends while drinking a cup of coffee.

For others, journaling can be therapeutic and help rid of the heavy thoughts so you may be holding inside.

Colleen Moretti, a junior communication student said, “It’s a good way to relieve stress and get all of your feelings out.” At first, sitting down to journal can seem daunting and can even make you feel awkward. An easy way to start off is by writing down certain things you are grateful for, or positive parts of your day. Once you put positive thoughts down on paper, the universe will reward you. You will always get back 100 times what you give; journaling is a great way to manifest in your future.

Journaling is also a great way to dispose of feelings of anger or distress. Keeping your feelings bottled up will only hurt you in the long run. Sometimes it is better to pick any and write your battles when facing a potential argument. Instead of choosing to pro-voke someone, first, write down in your journal what you are feeling. This will give you the same satisfaction of a face to face confrontation but will help you move on faster. When you start to write down your thoughts, you can also help yourself through any times.

Dr. James Pempekaker, the author of Writing to Heal wrote, “When we translate an experience into language we essentially make the experience graspable.”

When we can grasp what is going on in our lives, it makes it easier to acknowledge rather than deny the problems we may be having.

You never truly know the feelings you have been harboring until you allow yourself to open up to a piece of paper. When asked how journaling has impacted her own life, Rebecca Lee, junior health studies student said, “It gets me in touch with feelings I may have been suppressing.”

Journaling can also give you a boost of self-esteem. It can be easy to lose sight of the things that make us special in this life. Using journal to write down positive affirmations can help you achieve more self-confidence. By writing down these affirmations your brain will believe what you are telling it. Slowly, over time, writing down what you love about yourself will only strengthen your own personal relationship with yourself.

Journaling is a great tool to find a starting point for the goals you want to achieve. Writing down your goals can help you envision a path that you see yourself going on down the road. Putting down your future dreams into a journal also simultaneously helps you put them out into the world. Recognizing your dreams and goals will motivate you to work smarter and harder. Journaling can also give you a window into the past. Not many people realize, but when you journal, you are doc-umenting the events happening in your life first hand.

If you commit to journaling, in five years you will have hila-rious memories to look back on.

Nick Messina, Specialist Professor of Communication said that journaling, more than anything else is a chance to create history.

“There is nothing more satisfying than getting to look back, 10, 20, 30, years and see what was going through our minds, explore our feelings, how we have grown, etc,” stated Mes-sina.

The next time you are getting ready for bed or find yourself bored, take your pen to paper and let your thoughts do the talking. Happy journaling.

Cozy Living: It’s Not That Hard

CASSANDRA CAPOZZI-SMITH
LIFESTYLES EDITOR

When living with your family or even living away from home in a dorm room, it is so important to feel comfortable in your space.

Making your room cozy, especially for the fall or winter seasons is so essential because it brings a welcoming vibe to the room.

From pictures to color schemes to decorative pillows, cozy is not that hard.

One thing that may sound simple, but can cozy up any space would be to add a plant.

Adding a plant allows there to be life in the room. Plants not only add color but it is healthy to have them in your environment. If you can maintain keeping it alive, definitely go out and buy a real plant, but if you think you’ll slack on giving it the necessities for life, there are many places to buy fake plants.

As college students, it is important to be in a work-space that gives you the proper amount of light. Whether you add a few lamps or make sure you have the proper natural light, it can allow you to be in a space that promotes productivity.

Something that people do to make a room cozy is adding extra pillows or blankets. These fuzzy blankets that call your name will be bound to make your feel cozy.

This is such a simple aspect that can make any room feel softer and more welcoming.

Not only do blankets add a softer and more welcoming sign or piece of crafty with it and make a art for the room.

Going off of that, extra pillows emphasize a want for comfort.

Decorative pillows promote creativity and are great staple pieces for living.

Alyssa Kelly, a junior English student said that “Candles add a calming vibe to any room.” She continued in saying that, “A candle is such a simple and versatile object that could make any room feel cozy.”

Similarly, Stefanie Ziemer, a junior marketing, management, and decision sciences student agreed on the topic. Ziemer said, “To me, a candle and a warm blanket can make any room feel cozy.”

Being in the fall spirit, Ziemer said that she prefers an apple candle” to make her feel at home with a nice scent to relax her.

There is something comforting to people about art, one option could be to get a large painting and to hang it up will only hurt you in the long run. Sometimes it is better to pick any and write your battles when facing a potential argument. Instead of choosing to pro-voke someone, first, write down in your journal what you are feeling. This will give you the same satisfaction of a face to face confrontation but will help you move on faster. When you start to write down your thoughts, you can also help yourself through any times.

You never truly know the feelings you have been harboring until you allow yourself to open up to a piece of paper. When asked how journaling has impacted her own life, Rebecca Lee, junior health studies student said that “Can-dle gives her input on the top-ics. She even joked that her guests want to lay on it because of how inviting and cozy it looks.

Cavallo mentioned how important paint color is. "Color schemes set the mood for sure. Earth tones create a calming environment which could be important," Cavallo stated.

This is so true, the color of a wall can change the whole vibe of the room. Well students, while we may not be interior design majors, it seems like we all know a little something more on how to make our-selves feel more at home.

When expressing your feelings, a journal is a perfect way to do so. It is private, you can be honest, and it relieves stress.

When looking at journal, there are many kinds you can purchase. Some are even great for recalling memories later in life.

“Bohemian Rhapsody” is a cinematic retelling of the life of Freddie Mercury, lead singer of the legendary rock band Queen. It was directed by Bryan Singer and stars Rami Malek in the role of Mercury. The film explores the musician’s life from his early days with Queen in the 1960s to his solo work and final show with the band before his death in 1991.

The film received mixed reviews from critics and audiences alike. Some praised its musicality and dramatic performances, while others criticized its pacing and lack of depth in exploring Mercury’s personal life. Despite the mixed reactions, “Bohemian Rhapsody” was a financial success, grossing over $200 million worldwide.

The film’s success was largely due to its presentation of Queen’s iconic performances, particularly the legendary “Bohemian Rhapsody” live at Wembley Stadium. This sequence was nominated for an Academy Award for Best Makeup and Hair Styling. The film also received nominations for Best Original Song and Best Original Soundtrack.

In terms of its impact, “Bohemian Rhapsody” helped to introduce a new generation to Queen’s music and the story of Freddie Mercury. It has also sparked renewed interest in the band’s extensive back catalog and their influence on rock music.

While the film’s reception was not universally positive, it remains a notable entry in the annals of music biopics, offering a glimpse into the life of one of rock music’s most iconic figures.
I like to think just about every kid at one point had a fantasy about living out life in the wild west. Gun slinging your way through a desolate town, taking on desperados, and blowing up peace signs. That’s what gives you an imposing glare as tumbleweeds roll through the scene. Red Dead Redemption 2 breathes life into that fantasy, even if it isn’t the west like you imagined.

Red Dead 2 is the newest release and highly anticipated sequel from Rockstar Games, the same developer that created the wildly successful Grand Theft Auto franchise. The game creates a vast landscape of the west in the late 1800’s where the main character, Arthur Morgan, roams with his crew of outlaws.

As Morgan and his gang drift through snowy mountains and into wider territories, it’s up to the player to decide whether to fend off wild bears, or getting into shootouts with the rival Dutch gang in this lawless land.

Every little detail is fleshed out and fundamental to the immersion of the game. Playing for the first hour gave me a sense of adventure, riding, dressed head to toe in denim, and equipped with a cool cowboy hat.

I, self-admittedly, haven’t played the first iteration of this game and dove fresh into the sequel. Not to worry, the events of the game actually take place prior to the first version and setup to introduce the game mechanics for new players. It’s a rare example of a video game that is so rewarding on a granular level that it makes every minor action exciting and new.

The first mission of the game takes Arthur and his crew through a winding snowy terrain as you attempt to survive the night. The head member of the game is a man named Dutch. He rides with you and others into the frosty labyrinth in search for supplies and trouble.

This is the point of the game that instructs the player on the controls and it does so in a way that introduces the story and world as well as fulfilling the game’s atmosphere. It’s a rare example of a video game that is so rewarding on a granular level that it makes every minor action exciting and new.

The atmosphere of Red Dead is almost "West-worldian” to a degree. If you want to commit a crime on your own time in this game, you better be ready for the consequences because a bounty will be put out. If you need to restore your strength and eat food, you better be ready to hunt for your own supper. Each and every decision you make can alter the direction of the game, a truly spectacular feature.

It’s too often that games yada yada over things for the sake of story moving or moving the plot of the game along. Not Red Dead. You can tell the amount of effort put into this game by the developers that they deserve all the praise they can get.

The two seem to have a bright horizon as you ride into town and new. The graphics in this game are nothing short of remarkable. The graphics are so specific to the horizon as you ride into town and new. The graphics create an immersion I have not appreciated the slow burn, the return is extraordinary.

The easy comparison of this game would be Grand Theft Auto but with cowboys, however I think this is much different.

Everything down to the guitar strums that play in the background, this ride creates an immersion I have not experienced while playing a video game.

The game is rated mature and don’t take it just north of $60 so it certainly is a bit of an investment.

The story mode does feature an abundant amount of cut scenes and requires a lot of time to actually experience the game.

You probably don’t everyone’s cup of tea, but if you can learn to appreciate the slow burn, the return is extraordinary.

The Financial Planning Club; An Asset To You

Have you ever received a credit card bill in the mail and asked, “What, did I really spend $200 on Channel 4 News and two books again?”

How about at the beginning of the semester where you asked, “How am I going to pay my bills?”

Clearly, there is a need for understanding credit cards before making purchases or signing up for anything.

This is where the Financial Planning Club comes in. FPC is a student organization devoted to helping college students gain a better understanding of financial literacy. Their mission is to educate students about financial literacy and the implications of poor financial decision making.

At the meeting in Magill Commons, President Fantozzi, Marketing Chair Gianni Mazzone, and the FPC’s two advisors, professors Matt Lifson and Jeff Christakos, participate in the Financial Literacy Program, where high school students from the area visit the University throughout the week to learn the basics of financial planning. The FPC understands that financial literacy is a topic that is important across all ages.

To further strengthen their ties to the community, the FPC also participates in the Financial Literacy Program, where high school students from the area visit the University throughout the week to learn the basics of financial planning. Professor Spotlight on Dean John E. Henning

Amanda Balestrieri
Contributing Writer

John E. Henning, Ph.D., is the University’s Dean of Education. He joined the Hawk family in 2015 and has since been recognized with a wide range of awards and mentions. Being a part of the University’s most recognizable fields of study, he continues to influence both in- and outside the classroom.

As a student at Penn State, Henning was never one to picture himself sitting at a desk with students referring to him as “Dean.” Surprisingly, the education professional credits his passion for organic farming and reading, English for 12 years because of the best way to do that. Henning is an astounding support system for each and every student that he serves; whether he is a professor or dean, he makes sure that every person who comes to him leaves with success. He stated, “Every interaction with a student is different so there is always a challenge.” This speaks volumes to his position as a dean and while it seems like your typical desk job from the outside, it is so much more than that. Each day varies and speaking to different students aids in learning more from other perspectives.

In terms of Monmouth, Henning has expressed his initiative and knowledge as he implemented the Teacher Residency Program, a rigorous program of clinical experience in the classroom. This is the second largest field experience offered at the University.

Jennifer Plummer, a senior psychology student, talked about the residency program. “Dean Henning has provided opportunities to grow as a teacher and grow both professionally and educationally.”

Another one of Henning’s many contributions to Monmouth has been the year-long clinical experience. He expanded this program so that Monmouth could implement it before other NJ schools in 2015. It produced better teachers and the number of candidates doing it has increased rapidly over the years.

The New Doctoral Program, Ed.D. Educational Degree, approved in 2016, is Henning’s main contribution to the University. This is an educational leadership program that helps students achieve educational doctorate degrees, expand their knowledge, and create a spike in their marketability.

Collaboratively, his programs help to alleviate the number one fear of teacher candidates: the first day. By the time the actual first day comes around, it feels like an ordinary day because of the additional experience gained through the program.

Kelly Schuld, a junior history secondary education and TSD student, said, “He creates opportunities and programs for his students that give us the opportunity to dive first into a teaching career before even getting hired as a teacher. Making his students feel confident when going into their career is his most prevalent accomplishment of all.”

Henning has no regrets as for where he is right now as he no longer feels in his career, but it was the right place for me.” While he would have liked to pursue organic farming, education was his calling.

He drew a parallel between helping people grow is similar to growing plants. He sees them from the beginning, finds their strengths and weaknesses, and helps them to flourish in their career.

Outside of the classroom, Henning is heavily interested in philosophical work in learning how teachers grow and develop. Additionally, his fourth book titled, Building Mentoring Capacity in Clinically-Based Practice was just recently published along with educators Dianné M. Gut and Pam C. Bean. It is an informative read filled with case studies and discussion questions.

Without Henning’s ability to influence students, many of them would not be as successful as they are today. Not to mention, the continuing success of the School of Education is rooted in Henning’s many contributions to it since 2015.

Dean Henning, thank you for all that you do for all your students and associates; we cannot wait to see what the future of the School of Education holds.

How to Give Back During This Holiday Season

Skylar Daley
Staff Writer

With the coming of the holiday season, there are always things that we all need to slow down and reflect on. What do we need to do what we do not want. While Thanksgiving break brings happenings to the community, there are still many that are not out of mind.

While Thanksgiving break brings happenings to the community, there are still many that are not out of mind. Some of Monmouth’s own students are not going to go home to an empty house. Recently, Monmouth students have organized a full-year donation drive to help out both students who live on and off campus. The Hawk’s Nest is a food pantry in Laurel Hall, open from 4-6 p.m. on Monday and Thursday.

Nick Verzicco, senior business administration and finance major, and student assistant, said, “We have passed out about 40 meal bags so far. It is an exciting new organization and there is only room to grow.”

Verzicco continued, “When you come, bring a friend and spread the word. You can use the have already passed, you can get an idea as to the many fundraisers that are nearby campus.

Melissa Culmone, a senior statistics student, participates in the walk every year. She said, “I walk in memory of my dad, Thomas John Culmone Sr., who was passed away from Leukemia in 2009.” Culmone continued, this year, her team alone “raised over $1,000 which gets donated to blood cancer research and to families who need financial help” with medical bills.

There is more to college than just classes and parties. We are a family at Monmouth University; and by going to this school, we are a part of the greater Long Branch community. Let’s give back to the place that we can call our second home.

Donating non-perishable food items is just one way to give back to our community during this season.
Small Ways to Help the Environment

JENNA PUGLISI FEATURES EDITOR

Our environment is suffering, and there are things that every student can do to help it get better. No effort is too small; everyone has the power to create a positive impact.

Randall Abate, professor of political science and environmental law, also serves as Endowed Chair in Marine and Environmental Law and Policy. Commenting on the current state of our environment, Abate said, “Global climate change is caused by many factors worldwide, but it has significant impacts here in Monmouth County.”

He continued, “Yes, level rise, more intense storms, and more frequent episodes of coastal flooding, coastal erosion, and harmful algal blooms are just a few of the many climate change impacts in our area that are perturbing human health and safety, coastal infrastructure, the local economy, and marine and terrestrial plant and animal species.”

Some Monmouth University students are not involved in the environment movement, but everyone should recognize why it is important to care. “Students should care about these issues because they impact our daily lives and become a moral duty to serve as stewards of the environment to ensure that future generations inherit a habitable planet,” Abate continued.

A simple suggestion is to purchase in the use of reusable products. “The easiest ways for students to minimize waste in their daily routines is by using reusable containers for cold and hot beverages,” Abate said.

Sara Sikora, senior communication student, shared, “I use a reusable water bottle that I either refill from my Brita or from water fountains around campus.”

If you are on a budget, measures like this will end up actually saving you money. Instead of having to buy a supply of plastic water bottles every week, you will only need to buy one container that you can refill for ever. Some brands, such as Neogen, are very affordable; you can get a BPA-free bottle for under $10.

Global corporations have been doing their part by making reusable containers more accessible to their customers. For instance, Starbucks announced this past week that they would give away a limited-edition reusable cup to any customer who purchased a holiday beverage on Nov. 1. As an incentive to use the cup, customers would then get 50 cents off all future holiday beverages. Starbucks also has established a plan to ban the use of plastic straws in their stores, which will further help eliminate waste. In place of plastic, stainless steel straws are becoming a highly beneficial trend, and you can purchase them right in our student center.

Helping the environment is not merely limited to the containers that we use for our food. In fact, the food itself can have a negative impact on our environment. “Adopting a vegan or vegetarian diet has a significant impact on reducing pollution and waste streams on a local, national, and global basis. Simple things you do every day, like not using dozens of pages. ‘I only print what I absolutely need. For example, if I’m printing a journal article and do not need the references at the end, I will not print those pages because it is an easy way to save paper,’ Sikora said.

Overall, there are so many easy ways for every student to help the environment. There is no excuse for doing nothing.

He continued, “Sea level rise, drought, loss of natural habitats, the impact on reducing pollution and waste streams on a local, national, and global basis. Simple things you do every day, like not using dozens of pages. ‘I only print what I absolutely need. For example, if I’m printing a journal article and do not need the references at the end, I will not print those pages because it is an easy way to save paper,’ Sikora said.

Overall, there are so many easy ways for every student to help the environment. There is no excuse for doing nothing.

The current generation is responsible for the future condition of the Earth. We only get one planet, and we all need to treat it with the respect that it deserves.

Tips for Building the Perfect Resume

MELODIA BADANO START WRITER

It’s not uncommon for students to struggle with building resumes. Creating a resume can cause stress and pressure, since it’s the main determining factor in getting hired for a job. A resume’s objective is to make it so difficult. There are simple tips to follow that will ensure a first impression is a lasting impression.

If you’re beginning from scratch, any information should be included on every resume: contact information, achievements, skills, education, experience, and aspirations. First off, a resume should be clear and consistent. Using one or two font styles and sizes throughout your resume gives it clarity and consistency. This will mark the difference between a weak and a strong resume. An employer spends too much time figuring out where to find your experience, skills, education, and aspirations, so they will simply be tossed to the side.

Another aspect of clarity that many people don’t consider is name size. The most important part of contact information is your name; it must be large and bold to ensure it’s the first thing the employer sees upon viewing your resume. It’s your brand name, and your resume must wear it well.

Organizing experience and education in reverse chronological order also gives your resume an edge while highlighting your current experience by placing it on top. Bullet points offer clarity but should not be used excessive- ly; rather, they should highlight the most important parts of your resume.

Another vital aspect of a resume is keeping it everything relevant. Although you may have experience with ten different employers, only list the experience that is relevant to the one you’re applying to. List and be honest about the experience that has taught transferrable skills, which are skills that can be utilized for any job.

Your resume should be broken down to let the employer know that you really want that job. In fact, one of the most common mistakes is listing the same requirements for every job you apply for. Rather, each resume should be tailored to the wants of your own experiences. “I don’t have much experience, so put my skills on top,” said sophomore computer science student Shabbir Khan. “The work shops [Monmouth] has about making your resume have really been helpful; I learned about the different types of resumes, resumes where you put your education on top or at the bottom, and variations of that.”

When your perfect resume comes to life, don’t forget to proofread it carefully; minuscule grammar and spelling mistakes add up and will leave the employer unimpressed. In other words, you should have a low chance of hiring you. Your contact information is the most important section that should be proofread, since a typo in your phone number or email address means you will never get contacted for the job.

Don’t be lazy when it comes to building a resume, since a substantial one leads to great opportunities. “When you email your resume, the only thing you have to go on is that piece of paper and its content,” said William Hill, Assistant Dean of Career Services. “It’s the most important thing because if that resume doesn’t sell and promote them in a good way, they’re not going to hear from that employer. If your resume is going to be discarded or put on file and they’re never going to hear from that employer again. Everything is weighing on it.”

Whether you’re revamping your resume or starting from scratch, these tips are sure to help land the job of your dreams.
Women’s Soccer Wins Third-Straight Championship

MARK D’AQUILA
SPORTS WRTITER

Women’s Soccer won their third straight Big South Conference Athletic Athletic Conference (MAAC) Championship with an emphatic 7-1 victory over Siena at Hesse Field on the Great Lawn on Sunday night. “The MAAC Championship is the goal every season so that’s the expectation for our program,” said Head Coach Kriszy Turner. “A terrific regular season capped off by an amazing championship weekend. I am super proud of this team.”

Junior forward Madie Gibson opened the championship’s scoring with her eighth goal of the season after converting a penalty kick in the 16th minute. Junior midfielder Lexie Paladino added a goal of the first half on a cross from junior forward Dana Schinko, who finished with two assists on the day.

It was freshman defender Jesi Rossman who helped the Hawks pull away in the second half with two headed goals of her own within the first five minutes of the second half. Both goals were assisted on corner kicks from Gibson who finished the MAAC Tournament with two goals and two assists in just two games.

Senior Ali DeLuca and Jazlyn Moya also got involved in the second half with back to back goals as the Hawks scored four times within the first fifteen minutes. Siena did pull one back in the 79th minute, but Monmouth cancelled it out just 65 seconds later.

Freshman forward Alexis Marino closed out the game’s scoring with her first career goal on a left footer to make the final 7-1 Monmouth.

The Hawks initially opened tournament play on Thursday evening, continuing their now double-digit winning streak with a 3-0 shutout against the Purple Eagles of Niagara with all three goals coming in the first half of play.

“All the time we see that a group that is getting some guys back that we didn’t have earlier in the season and that has helped. The more success they have, the more confidence they play with, the more confidence they play with, the more success they have. I like the way that’s trending. I like the way they are playing. They trust one in another, they are hustling, and they are playing for each other. Whenever you exhibit those characteristics, you are going to play good defense.”

Football’s defense overpowered the Charleston Southern Buccaneers, defeating them 37-3 on Saturday afternoon. Monmouth had two 100-yard rushers and junior quarterback Kenji Bahar threw for three touchdowns.

“We are very happy with the win today. When we get into Big South play, we know each game holds significant importance and our focus is to go 1-0 this part of the season,” said Head Coach Kevin Callahan.

“In that regard, we got the job done today but how we got the job done is the true story here. We knew going in we had to win the line of scrimmage on both sides of the ball and I think we saw just that today. From the defensive line to the front seven stand point, I think we completely dominated the line of scrimmage and controlled the run game and that made it easier to play the passes when they took the ball to the ground,” said Callahan.

“Offensively, I think we leaned on them up front. We had two guys over 100 yards rushing, we were able to pound the way and that opened up some throws and Kenji made some good throws for three scores. It was a total team effort and our team played to the very end,” said Callahan.

The game started off slow for both teams, with each of them unable to get points on their first two drives each.

Then late in the first, The Hawks went 62 yards down the field, 57 of which came on the ground. Monmouth ended the drive with an eight yard rushing touchdown by sophomore running back Pete Guerriero.

Guerriero finished the game with 117 rushing yards on 22 carries. Along side Guerriero, the Hawks ran for a total 295 rushing yards, with freshman running back Juvon Farri coming in second with 100 rushing yards.

“The game plan all week was to get our offense going, get our tempo up,” Guerriero said. “It is easier when our offensive line dominates up. We can rotate the running backs and keep us fresh and tired, it is something we can get a defense on.”

The Blue and White scored on their next two drives, as both drives went for over 76 total yards.

The Hawks went up 14-0 on a six yard receiving touchdown by senior wide receiver Vinny Grasso.

On the next drive, sophomore wide receiver Terrance Greene Jr. scored his first career touchdown on a 17-yard pass from Bahar.

Junior kicker Matt Mosquera scored the last point of the half on a 44-yard field goal as time expired, making it the 24-0 at the half.

Mosquera was named Big South Special Teams Player of the Week for the second week in a row.

In the third quarter, Mosquera kicked another field goal on their opening drive of the second half, this time from 36 yards out. The field goal was set up by a sophomore defensive back Justin Terry interception.

For the game, Bahar finished with 155 passing yards on 15 completions and four each. Greene Jr. led the team with 63 receiving yards on six receptions.

On defense, sophomore lineman Ivan Schoor led the team with tackles way up.

Next up, Monmouth (7-2, 3-0 Big South) takes on No. 2 ranked No. 11 Virginia in the first ever meeting of the two programs.

Field Hockey secured their third Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference (MAAC) Championship since joining the conference in 2013 on Sunday afternoon with a 2-1 win against Fairfield on home turf at So Sweet a Cat Field.

The visitors decisively played the better first half, outstanding the Hawks 11-3 and holding a 5-1 advantage in the corner department. However, the Hawks were unable to capitalize on their shot advantage and both teams ended the first half in a scoreless deadlock.

The Hawks came out storming in the second half and looked like a completely different team. Monmouth played vigorously and it eventually paid off when sophomore midfielder Ireen Frenken scored the game’s opening goal off of a corner attempt that was assisted by junior midfielder Josephine Branch.

“That aggressiveness showed in every aspect of the match, we played a more aggressive style of play. We get going with the better first half, outshooting the visitors in a scoreless deadlock,” said Head Coach Carli Figlio. “We essayed multiple more attacks and finally worked our way to a corner and to an equalizer after their defensive stop by freshman forward Alexi Okken’s first goal in the 41st minute after a fast break opportunity that she successfully converted.”

Sophomore midfielder Meg de Lange rounded out the second half with a goal in the 49th minute that was assisted by senior forward Georgia Garden Bachop before travelling to St. Francis (NY) on Monday, Nov. 12.

Senior forward Georgia Garden Bachop was named MAAC Player and Offensive Player of the Year for her performances in Monmouth’s title-winning season.

“The men were strong right from the start and never gave the opposition a chance on the scoreboard,” said Head Coach Matt Nunnally. “The women’s meet was close throughout coming down to the last relay. Overall, everyone showed a lot of fight and I am excited about what this type of performance can do for our confidence moving forward.”

This weekend’s competition was slightly different from what the Hawks are used to. The meet took place in a metered swimming pool, which is longer than the 25-yard pool that Monmouth’s teams usually practice and compete in.

“Swimming on a road in a metered pool presented a tough challenge for us today,” said Nunnally. “Despite the testing conditions the team showed tremendous focus throughout the meet. It was encouraging to see them face the challenge presented today putting up solid results.”

Sophomore defender Hannah Schiano earned the 400-meter medley win. For the 400-meter freestyle win, Washington and Barkhui zen combined their efforts with McAllister and freshman Kevin Del Giorno in order to get the victory.
